The New Jersey Legislature finds and declares that equine activities involve risks that are essentially impractical or impossible for the operator to eliminate; and that those risks must be born by those who engage in those activities. The Legislature therefore determines that the allocation of the risks and costs of equine animal activities is an important matter of public policy and it is appropriate to state in law those risks that the participant voluntarily assumes for which there can be no recovery. (P.L. 1997, Chapter 287).
